In the wake of the catastrophic radiation accident at Fukushima nuclear power plant in March 2011, there has been a significant increase in interest from international public health organizations on monitoring countries for potential bio-warfare agents. The Japanese environment ministry has been monitoring possible bio-warfare agents in the environment and has identified the growth of two non-indigenous organisms in the Japanese environment that are a potential risk for human health. As it turns out, this exercise was a long-term prospective project, because the organisms did not pose a risk until the 2010 summer when Japan's first big typhoon appeared. At that time, the organisms spread from the Northeast to the West and remained for two years. This review briefly describes the findings of three independent studies that the Japanese environment ministry conducted regarding these organisms. These analyses help to shed light on the biologic warfare agents. The Japanese experience, the lessons learned, and the challenges ahead are discussed in this review.Support the Village of East Hampton Village Hall In 2018, the Village of East Hampton will be able to better support the operations of the Village Hall. There is a need to upgrade some of the equipment and buildings which will greatly enhance the opportunities for residents. What's New In JTomtom?

* Available updates for: Quickfix / Radar POI: Updates are regularly delivered for the most important POI and also for the ones listed in the category "POI Favorites". The synchronization between the Quickfix and Radar is done by a separate, minimalistic request to the server. As a result, you will always get the most current information, and when the update has been delivered, the POI are updated locally. Please note that the deletion of POI is not supported. You should always use the original TomTom Quickfix software and not a third party. This Java application is compatible with all tablets and smartphones running Android 2.2 (Froyo) or higher. To find out more about this application, be sure to read jTomtom's website at Screenshot of jTomTom: * Important!
