You can participate in discussions and comment on articles. You can also view FAQs to get answers about how Photoshop Elements works or ask for help. How can I create images in Photoshop Elements? Photoshop Elements has many features to help you edit and create images. You can use the tools and features that best fit your needs. A lightroom-like view is available to view and organize your images, and you can add images from your hard drive, e-mail, camera and other sources. You can even import images from Adobe Lightroom. How do I create a custom image in Photoshop Elements? Many new Photoshop Elements users find that Photoshop Elements is not as user-friendly as other programs. The first steps of creating a new image are very simple. You choose a paper size, a paper orientation and a background color. You then can choose the image's subject. You can choose from a list of predefined textures (photos and patterns), or create your own. After that, you can adjust and manipulate the values of the image. You can resize and crop it, change the color settings, or apply special effects. You can even create a new layer and add more images to a layer. You can then move, rotate, change the transparency, resize and position it. You can enhance an image with filters and effects. If you have Adobe Photoshop, you can save the image using Photoshop Elements. You can also add an image to an image group. You can give the group a name and number. The group will appear when you open a file where it is tagged. You can add

Q: Ember Custom Component Data in Controller

I've created a custom component for a component and need to export some data from within the component's template in to the component itself. This is probably more of a JS question, but I've read other posts here and the Ember docs didn't quite get to the bottom of it. Ember's awesome documentation on components goes over this part very well: But I'm still confused. For simplicity's sake, let's say I have an ember-cli application created with `ember g application`. I've created a new component with `ember g model`. I named it `UserComments`. I now have a model `user-comments` and one `user-comments` component view. Now, the docs say I can pass an array of models into the component's view. I'm using this component a lot in my layout.

{{#each user in model}} {{user.name}}
{{/each}}

Now, I am confused about how to export this data to the component itself. The documentation says that if I want to export data to the component, I can simply export a function to the component's file, like this: `export default Ember.Component.extend({ // This is the data I want to export commentArray:
Ember.computed.alias('model.commentArray') });`

But, how do I specify that `model.commentArray` is what I want, as it is a record of these component views? For example, if my template looks like this:

{{#each user in model.commentArray}}

`{{user.name}}` `{{/each}}` Then `user.name` won't work as I expect. A: You are confusing Ember code with HTML code. In your view, you are printing the whole array of model's comments, rather than each comment individually. You probably want something like: `{{#each user in model.commentArray}}` `{{/each}}` Then, in

One of the most often used brushes is the default Brush tool. It can be found under the toolbar along with various tools. The following screenshot shows its settings. You can simply select it by clicking on it: The next two most useful tools for beginners are the Pen Tool and the Paint Bucket Tool. Both are probably the most important toolset for the beginning Photoshop user. The Pen tool allows the user to create a variety of objects by dragging the cursor over the canvas. Here is a close-up of the tool: The Paint Bucket tool allows the user to select any pixels from the image and put them in a designated area. Here is a screenshot of the tool: Next is the History Brush. It is unique, as it is the only tool you can select pixels directly from the image, regardless of what layer you're on. If you have used some of the other tools, you'll know how useful it is. The History Brush is also the only tool you can apply to multiple layers. Here is a screenshot of the tool: The Eraser tool is useful for removing any unwanted pixels or objects in the image. It has a few different settings, shown in the following screenshot: There are several ways to change brush settings. For example, to change the size of the brush, right-click on the pen and select "Edit Brush" from the menu or press Alt+B. To change the size, click on the tool and use the numbers to set the size. There are also a few more options to try: You can use the Curves tool to change the shape of the brush. You can also use the feather to change the softness of the edges. You can also change the width of the brush via the same tool. Once you've selected a brush, you can click on the pen to change the color. One last feature is the "Blend" setting in the Tool Options dialog box. You can use this to control how some of the brushes interact with each other. By default, they blend together seamlessly (i.e., they are blended with a Gaussian Blur of 1.0). If you want to change this, just change it. You can use the slider to move between None (no blending), Blend All (all brushes blend together) and Blend Individual (selective blending). You can use the Pen tool to create a variety of effects, as well. To use them, follow these simple steps
